

Two fiber optic switches cannot connect

Article Overview

Two fiber optic switches may fail to connect due to mismatched transceivers, fiber types, wavelengths, or port configurations.

Common Causes of Connection Failure

- Incompatible SFP Modules: Each switch requires compatible SFP or SFP+ transceivers. Using third-party or incorrect modules can prevent the link from establishing or cause instability .
- Fiber Type Mismatch: Single-mode and multi-mode fibers are not interchangeable. A single-mode transceiver requires single-mode fiber, and multi-mode transceivers require multi-mode fiber .
- Wavelength Differences: Transceivers must operate at the same wavelength. For single-fiber modules, both ends must match in wavelength (e.g., 1310nm or 1550nm) .
- Port Configuration Issues: Ensure the switch ports are set to fiber mode if they support combo ports (shared copper and fiber). Duplex mode and port speed should also match .
- Optical Power and Sensitivity: The transceiver's output power and the receiving port's sensitivity must be compatible. A mismatch can prevent the link from coming up .
- Distance Limitations: Fiber transceivers have maximum transmission distances. Exceeding this range can result in no connectivity .
