

Typical shelf unit models

Article Overview

Shelf units range from industrial pallet racks and boltless shelving to modular and designer systems, each tailored for specific storage needs and environments.

Industrial and Warehouse Shelving

1. Pallet Racking: The most common warehouse shelving system, designed for storing palletized goods. Variants include selective pallet racking for individual pallet access, drive-in/drive-through racking for high-density storage, and push-back racking for LIFO storage efficiency. These systems are ideal for warehouses with high SKU variety or bulk storage needs and are accessed using forklifts or order pickers . 2. Boltless Shelving: Cost-effective and versatile, boltless shelving is suitable for small to medium-sized items. It allows adjustable shelf heights and is commonly used in e-commerce warehouses, workshops, archives, and spare parts storage . 3. Cantilever Shelving: Designed for long, bulky, or heavy items such as pipes, timber, or steel beams. Horizontal arms attached to vertical uprights carry the load, making it ideal for timber trade, metalworking, and building materials storage . 4. Dynamic/Flow Shelving: Uses gravity-fed roller conveyors to implement FIFO (First-In, First-Out) storage. This system is perfect for perishable goods or high-turnover inventory .

Modular and Multi-Tier Systems

1. SSI SCHAEFER R 3000 and R 7000: Flexible modular shelving systems that can be expanded into multi-tier platforms. They feature adjustable shelves in 53 mm increments, high load-bearing capacity, and compatibility with mezzanine supports. These systems are suitable for small and medium parts storage and can adapt to c...
